Matthew Brown joined commercial real estate services firm NAI/Merin Hunter Codman as chief operating officer in its West Palm Beach, Florida, headquarters.

In his new role, Brown will oversee the growth and operation of the firm's brokerage and property management business lines in addition to identifying and closing real estate acquisitions throughout the Southeast on behalf of the company's affiliated MHCommercial Real Estate Funds.

Brown brings more than 20 years' experience, most recently as chief investment officer at New York-based Dabby Investments, where he handled the acquisition of value-add commercial real estate investments throughout the country. Before that, he worked in brokerage, capital markets and team leadership roles at Colliers, Newmark and the Carlton Group.

"I am truly fortunate to be working with a fantastic team, across a variety of business lines that NAI/Merin Hunter Codman has successfully cultivated over the last 30 years," Brown said in a corporate statement announcing the move. "I am enjoying reconnecting and making many new friends in South Florida's brokerage community as we are actively expanding our commercial real estate brokerage platform. On the fund side, we continue to leverage our management and leasing expertise in delivering value for our investors, and I am excited to help further scale this side of our business."
